Rodent Tears Stocking Before Spectator Kills It-Six Others Found Where Children Play-Pests Eat Meat Away From Bronx Zoo Lions.

Emboldened by hunger, a huge rat, one of a number seen recently just outside of Bronx Park, attacked a little girl playing with other children and tore away a piece of one stocking before an onlooker clutched the animal by its tail and dashed it to death on the sidewalk.

The little girl was Helen R. Miller, four years old, of 2139 Daly avenue. He ran over and grabbed the rodent by the tail. Selxas swung the rat to the sidewalk killing it. The screams of the child and of women who had witnessed the occurance brought several workmen from a building nare benches frequented by mothers and nurses. Children frequently play about there.

The little girl left her group and ran to one of the benches for a box of crackers. She dropped the box. In stantily the rat ran toward her from its riding place at the fence. Her socks had slipped down over her shoe tops and the rat, presumably trying to bite
